

Reading Foundations have access to a wide range of titles at extraordinary prices. They can purchase many popular books for just a dollar! Thus, donations to Bucks for Books have a big impact and are easy to make. Plus, they are tax deductible.

When purchasing books, choose those written for children age's newborn to eight. It's better to select ones that look a little too young rather than too old. Books are typically given to at-risk children whose reading skills tend to lag. Sometimes the adults in the family are not strong readers, so simple words and colorful illustrations make reading enjoyable. Books in languages other than English are always a high need.

Interesting in hosting a book drive? Wonderful! Collecting books comes in many forms; from a holiday party at work where each guest brings a book, to a neighborhood venture to recycle children's books that are no longer being used. Secondary schools sponsor successful book collections by having completions between classes or requesting a book as admittance to a dance. Two popular themes are Fall Book Harvest and Well Fed, Well Read, which collects books and food.
